CHRONICLE

A Message from the Rabbi

RABBI MICHAEL S. FRIEDMAN, SENIOR RABBI

I was in my college dorm room early on a Saturday evening in November, 1995 when a friend who lived upstairs burst in, out of breath. "Rabin was just shot!" he exclaimed. "By a Jew," I replied immediately. He thought I had already heard the news. But no, I had not. The political climate in Israel had turned poisonous that fall, and somehow I just knew that the murderer had to be a Jew. And I was incredibly sad.

This month marks the 20th anniversary of Rabin's assassination. His murderer aimed to derail the Oslo peace process, claiming that Rabin was a rodef, one who was threatening Jewish lives, and who therefore had to be pursued himself. Rabin's murder was shockingly effective. Fortunately Lincoln's assassination did not overturn the outcome of the Civil War, nor did King's reverse the momentum of the civil rights movement. But one could argue that the moment Rabin died, the Oslo peace process died too.

Dan Ephron writes in his new book Killing A King that the murderer aimed to "tip the balance in the right's favor by killing the one man who had both a vision for peace with the Palestinians and the public confidence required to keep it going."

Cabinet documents reveal that Rabin himself was quite wary about Oslo. He was famously reluctant to shake hands with Arafat on the White House lawn, let alone enter into agreements with him. Yet Rabin, who had been a hero for his nation's freedom, now became a martyr for his nation's peace.

The recent violence in Jerusalem and elsewhere has been heartbreaking. It is made even more so by the yahrzeit of one of the saddest days in all of Jewish history. We realize that in addition to mourning the death of Rabin himself, we are also mourning the death of a dream. We have come to the sad conclusion that whatever the ultimate outcome of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict may be, it surely will not be the vision of peace and cooperation that we once imagined.

And yet, like Rabin in his final moments of life, we keep singing songs of hope and peace because we are Jews. Giving up hope is simply not an option for us. We have faced difficult trials in every generation, and have overcome them all. That, I believe, is Rabin's greatest legacy – the refusal to give up hope for a better future, even in the face of daunting opposition. Zecher tzaddik livracha – may we always honor his memory.

A Message from the President

STEVEN PHILLIPS

The Radical Nonviolence of Dr. King

We use the word "radical" to position individuals and ideas outside the mainstream of our consideration. It means extreme, intransigent, destructive, and dangerous. A threat. But give it a half-century or more, and things can sometimes take on a warmer hue.

William Lloyd Garrison, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Pete Seeger, Margaret Sanger, Cesar Chavez, Ida B. Wells, Jane Addams, W.E.B. DuBois, A. Philip Randolph, Woody Guthrie, Rachel Carson, Margaret Fuller, James Baldwin, Harriet Tubman. American history is replete with men and women whose radical commitments to justice are now commended in high school textbooks and commemorated on postage stamps.

What William O. Douglas said of Louis Brandeis, whom he succeeded on the Court, has been said of them all: "Brandeis was a militant crusader for social justice whoever his opponent might be. He was dangerous not only because of his brilliance, his arithmetic, his courage. He was dangerous because he was incorruptible."

Today, it is hard to appreciate how uncompromising was Dr. King's call for justice – economic as well as social – or how threatening it was. No doubt, his commitment to non-violence helped make that so. Yet nothing could have been more radical, more confrontational.

From the Jim Crow segregation of the South, to the de facto segregation of the North, racism has always depended on intimidation and violence to sustain it. More often than not, that violence was sanctioned by local, state, or federal authorities. By asking his followers to forswear violence and put their lives at risk, as he did, he held a mirror up to our violence. Today, nearly fifty years after his murder, racial inequality and violence are still in the headlines. And Dr. King's example still calls to us.

This January 15, we will celebrate Martin Luther King's birthday with a special Shabbat service at Temple Israel. I hope you will join us to honor Dr. King's call for justice and our obligation to join in the work.
